STAUNTON, August 20, 1866. · a. B. Meade, Esq. :

My Dear Sir-I have received your letter, and I thank you for calling my attention to a construction of my testimony about the trial of resident Davis, which does injustice alike to my opinions and my feelings. My testimony was alen in short hand, and was not read over to ac or submitted for my revision. I am sur mised at its general correctness; but I find that, is several instances, my meaning has been encorately stated, or wholly misapprehended. The point of inquiry was as to the probable result of a trial of Mr. Davis before a court and jury, if one should be had, and not as to the ocopriety of subjecting him to such an ordeal. It was my purpose to state my belief that our unsuccessful attempt at revolution must be regarded as rebellion, and, if judicially considered and applied to individual cases, must sabject each offender to the penalties of treason. Such, I presume, must be the opinion of all Tho do not believe in what is called the "right "secession," and such must of course be the view of the Government of the United States Every pardon granted and evey amnesty offered 's an assertion of this principle; and every parcon sought or accepted admits at least a doubt

While my opinion as a lawyer is what I have stated. I do not at all intend to admit the propriety of attempting to deal by judicial trials with transactions whose national proportions clace them beyond the proper reach of court and jury. Each individual case if brought into court, must, in my opinion, be held to constitute treason, and be dealt with accordingly, but each case is so thoroughly a represeniative of all, that a trial of any one, would, to all intents and purposes, be subjecting the conduct of a nation to the review of twelve

If this would be true of any one Confederats, how much more must it be felt to be true of President Davis, who in his prison, is this day more emphatically the representative of our cause than he was when Commander-in-Chief of the Confederate army and navy.

To subject a man occupying his position to a trial by the narrow rules which limit judicial construction, and to the mockery of a jury trial, would, in my opinion, be an outrage too gross to be anticipated of any government in christendom.

Every day that he is kept in prison is a peremptory adjournment of all real reconciliation between the North and the South. Any attempt to subject him to further humiliation must be regarded as a personal wrong done to every erne Southern man; and if he shall be permitted to die in captivity his name will become the watchword of Southern hate! It is to be regretted that the Convention recently held at Philadelphia did not recognize the necessity of amnesty for the past as a basis of good will for the future; but I trust that this omission will be set right by President Johnson, and that he will by the prompt disenarge of Mr. Davis, give practical point and vitality to his recent declaration that "unless we forget the past we can | ministrator of John McNair, deceased, defendhave no future." Yours, truly,

JOHN B. BALDWIN.
